ON SOCIOCULTURAL FUNDAMENTALS OF MODERN SCIENCE

It is marked, that the process of globalization has led to elimination of essential sociocultural distinctions between countries and people. Nevertheless, significant qualitative and quantitative disproportions in the development of scientific researches depending on countries and regions of the world are observed on this background. These disproportions in many respects are caused by the policy of states in respect of science. The choice of priorities in carrying out of scientific researches within the limits of such policy is caused by geographical, geopolitical position of the country and its demographic potential, i. e. the same circumstances which define the sociocultural image of the country as a whole. In this connection it is considered, that for achievement of an adequate understanding of the modern condition of science it is necessary to address to consideration of a wider sociocultural context concerning geographical, geopolitical, and demographic aspects of science development as a social institute and a form of knowledge.
